Name Mr. Rakesh Kishen
(2012-2016)

Hello guys,

I am Rakesh Kishen, doing my Masters in Engineering Management specialized in Energy & Environmental management in Politecnico Di Milano. First of all I would like to say all the very best for your bachelor program. We usually think engineering is very tough to learn, of course it is, but we are not learning the whole world of engineering. I think we are well capable to get knowledge from your particular field. Don't focus only on exams because that gives you only mark. What I felt after coming to Milan is basics. What are the basics? They are not the basics of engineering, they are Microsoft suite like word, excel, PowerPoint and etc whichever you prefer. These are the basics that you need, when you enter into the firm. Do you think they will ask the definition of Newton's law? No they didn't because Microsoft suites are the basics for the work environment and also if you are joining in the startup or business project this would help you collect the information. And after that please learn any software related to your field, for example CAD if you learn at least one you can survive for particular vacancy. These two points can be useless, you may ask me "Hey man I am doing Engineering! Can't you see". I personally suffered in Masters and also in my workplace without having proper skill but now in Master degree I learnt more than those things but the initial stage would be harder. So whatever CGPA you get is only for joining next level but the skills you develop is more important. If you guys have to do Master degree don't hesitate to ping me. Thank you

Name Mr. S. Sriram Prakash

Designation Software Engineer, Robert Bosch,

I joined KPRIET in 2010 with lot of dreams. When I joined it was a small institution with less than 140 students in EEE. I enjoyed a lot during four year of studies. I got motivation from my mentors and faculties to participate in many events and programs like internship workshops intra college event etc. it gave me a strength to shine among others. Now a milestone achieved by KPRIET autonomy. Now upcoming students can have a great practical learning due to autonomy. Kindly my humble advice is grasp practical as well as theoretical skills to develop yourself to become a good engineer.
